When the Lord appeared in the church, W. P. Campbell, W. P. Porter, and W. P. Campbell, elders, were present. The meeting was opened with the singing of the 100th Psalm. After an introduction, the Rev. Mr. Campbell, a member of the church, was called to the platform and said:

"When I came into the church, I saw many good brethren in the search for a passage to the church, wanting to be members and brethren to the church. Missionary societies, the Christian Endeavor, and other similar organizations were all in evidence. The Lord's work was in progress. The brethren were working hard. We must be diligent in our work."

The question was raised by J. H. Davis, who said:

"I think we should be more zealous in our work."
