

ARTICLES BY HECTOR C. BYWATER IN THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN:

The Treaty Cruiser--is it Worth While?
High Speed and Heavy Battery Offset By Poor Protection
November 1, 1926 — Hector C. Bywater

New Treaty Battleships "Nelson" and "Rodney"
The British Interpretation of the Lessons of the Jutland Battle
October 1, 1925 — Hector C. Bywater

Where British Patents Come From
Something of the History and Present Equipment of the Patent Office in London
April 1, 1923 — Hector C. Bywater

The Parsons Steam Turbine
Story of the Early Struggles and Final Triumph of a Great Invention
October 1, 1922 — Hector C. Bywater

Reducing Dreadnoughts to Scrap Metal
What the British Have Done By Way of Disposing of Their Obsolete or Discarded Fighting Ships
June 1, 1922 — Hector C. Bywater

The First, and Last, 18-Inch Naval Gun
The Leading Naval Powers Have Agreed to Build No Guns Greater Than 16-Inch
April 1, 1922 — Hector C. Bywater

Naval Construction in Japan
Facts and Figures Regarding the Strength of the Japanese Navy Today and in 1927
January 1, 1922 — Hector C. Bywater

Britain's New Battle Cruisers
December 1, 1921 — Hector C. Bywater

High-Speed Fighting Ships
December 1, 1921 — Hector C. Bywater

A Super-Dreadnaught as Target
The Latest German Battleship Baden Sunk by Gunfire and Torpedo
May 21, 1921 — Hector C. Bywater

The British Fleet of Today
A Detailed Account of the Drastic Reductions in the Strength of the British Navy

April 9, 1921 — Hector C. Bywater

The "Super-Destroyer"

Some Facts Concerning the Origin and Development of the Flotilla Leader

November 6, 1920 — Hector C. Bywater

The Backbone of Naval Power

British Confidence in the Battleship as Exemplified in the "Hood"

May 1, 1920 — Hector C. Bywater