Hailing from California, Harp graduated from Liberty University in 2015. Diagnosed with bone cancer the same year, Harp underwent unsuccessful chemotherapy treatments before finding hope through Trump's Right to Try law in 2018, which allowed her to seek experimental treatment and credited it with saving her life.

Speaking in 2019, she said: "I'm not dying from cancer anymore – thanks to President Trump, I'm living with cancer."

After a successful stint hosting The Real Story on One America Network, where she often highlighted her faith and criticized Democratic policies, Harp joined Trump's communications team in March 2022.

The aide plays a pivotal role in ensuring that Trump is updated with positive news stories, often seen accompanying him on golfing trips and equipped with a mobile office to provide instant updates.

In a viral clip after his November 6 election win, Trump is seen making a series of comments to Harp for her to post under his Truth Social handle.

The aide is also seen in the clip typing on her laptop before asking for final approval and posting the statement.

In the video, posted by Tucker Carlson's Art of the Surge, Trump's team is seen watching Kamala Harris give a speech at the DNC in August.

With a bottle of Coca-Cola in hand and a plate of chicken nuggets in front of him, Trump watched as his then-opponent took the stage.
